This strip of four sequential frames shows a close-up of a small insect, likely a fly or a similar dipteran, being held by a pair of fine tweezers. The tweezers grip the insect's head and thorax. In the second frame, the tweezers are released, and the insect falls onto a dark, textured surface, possibly a leaf or a piece of fruit. The third frame shows the insect lying on its back, attempting to roll over. The fourth frame shows the insect fully recovered and moving its legs.
